

touristification: gentrification caused by tourism

Planned touristification (?)

Waterfront Areas Development in the city of Gdansk

Klaudia Nowicka, Katarzyna Barańczuk

Gdańsk: Introduction

established: 10th century
city population: 464 thousand (2017)
city area: 262 km<sup>2</sup>
metropolitan area population: 1,5 million (2017)

SOLIDARNOŚĆ

Waterfront: the case of Granary Island

Waterfront: the case of Granary Island – the past – 2 years ago

Waterfront: the case of Granary Island – nowadays

Waterfront: the case of Granary Island – the future

Delivery mechanism

Most of the projects on Granary Island are implemented by private companies.

The only exception is Granaria.

Development framework – is everything [really] planned?

in blue: areas covered with master plans

Granary Island
[master plans repealed]

Master planning in Gdańsk

The river, the value

The riverside location is vital part of marketing and promotion strategies.

Several of the projects' names include terms like „river” or „waterfront”: Riverview, Waterlane, Riverfront Apartments.

„The places will double their value in a short time period.”

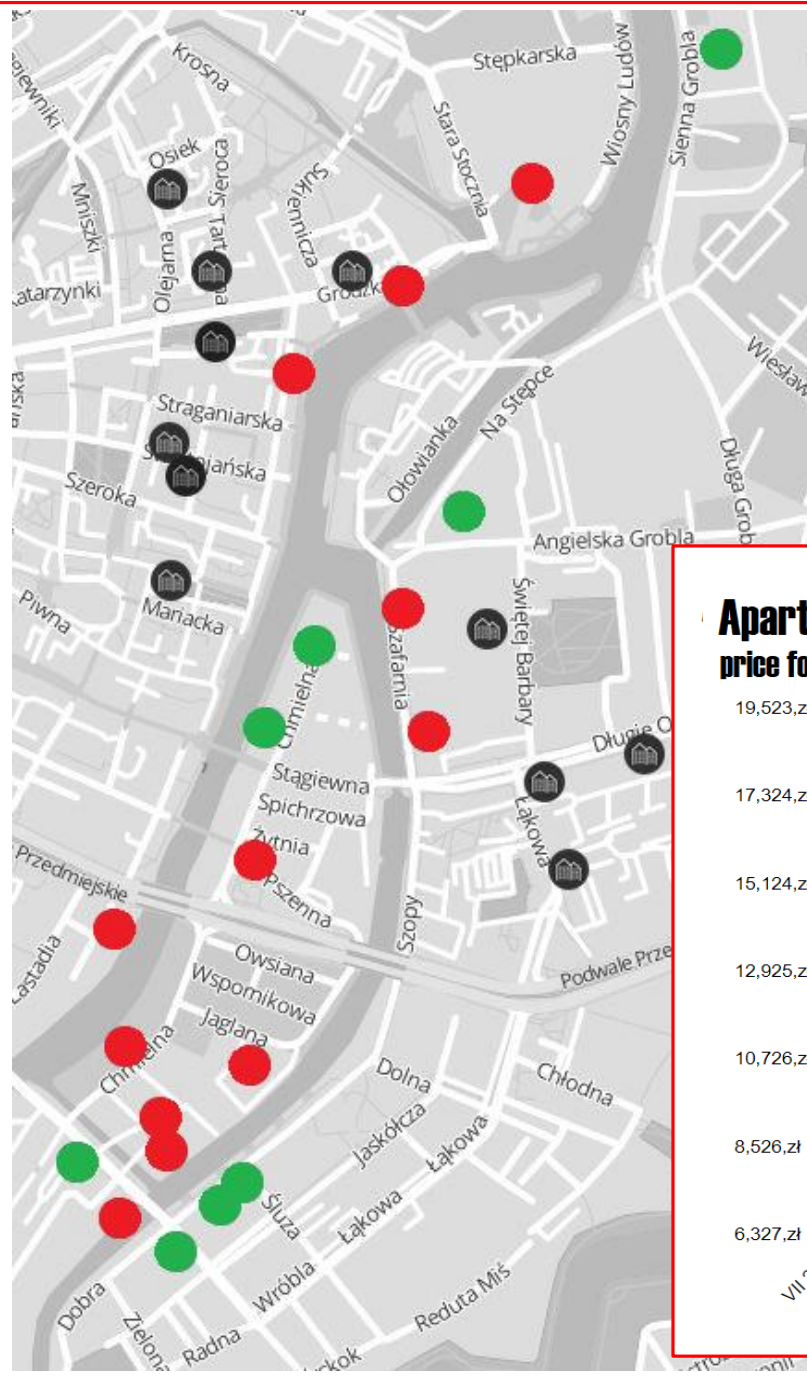

Marketing slogan:
„Drop your anchor for years”.

Waterfront development leading to (re)creation of urban value

Real estate projects (since 2009)

- finished
- under construction or planned

Apartments in the Downtown price for m<sup>2</sup>

Waterfront Areas Development

Outcomes: economic, urban, social

+ Economic benefits :

- for people owning old apartments in the areas which used to be neglected
- for the authorities – rent fees
- for developers

+ Urban landscape:

- new public spaces have emerged
- the new buildings do not disturb the Old Town traditional landscape

- Social dimension:

- developing touristification:
/lack of new urban communities/

Protest against tourism in Barcelona in 2017
Manu Fernandez/AP

DEPARTMENT OF SOCIO ECONOMIC GEOGRAPHY

UNIVERSITY OF GDANSK

---

Thank you.